A research paper on the effects of ambient air quality on the health of children who play in a play.When I was 15, I was rushed to the emergency room by a 16-year-old best friend who, despite having spent the entire day eating, drinking, and trying to drink me under the table at three different hangout spots, insisted I was suffering from "acid reflux." It's a real thing. At first I was annoyed, "We're not at a bar!" I said. However, the doctors saw it, and my best friend insisted I see the doctor. I was sent home with an anti-inflammatory medication the next day, and within a few hours I was dosing myself down. I was convinced my girlfriend was my best friend, because she was just as sloshed as my best friend, but she was willing to drive us home. When my mom got home from work, I was asleep on the sofa with her sandals on. They're actually real sandals. I visited the doctor every three months for the next year, and even when we moved across the country in high school, I still saw him every few months. In a moment of wisdom, we figured my doctor would be a much less frequent visitor if we cut the other half of our visits in half, and for the next five years we stuck to that schedule. Dr. H was my first doctor. He had a lab in his office, and I paid $20 to test all my blood—I was a prime target for the sexual revolution, and had managed to stumble into a misguidedly
