.3.2001, that also gets the information from wikipedia and google. I have a lazy mind. I have the same problem. I have been reading this topic for so long now. I can't find solution for it. I have been using Phpldapadmin as a database manager for years now. This script also uses the same method. The information that gets into the script was not given by any one source. Some of the information was even not found in the sources. Why this? How can I fix it? Is there a fix in place already? If not, please inform me. I got this problem when I created a custom field in my database to link users to their profile. It was all fine in the beginning but it stopped to work when I updated my phpldapadmin software to latest version. And still not working. I saw some posts saying that this is due to latest changes in phpldapadmin. I hope you can help me with a solution. My business partner and I have been using phpldapadmin for several months now without much problem, until recently. We are doing a conversion to a different database structure using a third party tool. The tool requires us to change the locations of some of the folders which reside within phpldapadmin. We thought this would be a simple task, but when we try to do it, we get the following error message: "There has been an error saving the conversion. The backend process can't find the required data file (c:\program files\phpldapadmin\config.php). Please delete and recreate the conversion." How can we fix this error? We would really appreciate any assistance with this issue. We have a linux server with phpldapadmin installed. We have been using it successfully for a couple of years, but recently we have had to change the source of the data we use. The reason for this change is that the original data is very old and not reliable. The new data is from a more reliable source and will provide us with the information we need. The old data has not been updated for a long time. How can we fix the error, "there has been an error saving the conversion. The backend process can't find the required data file (c:\program files\phpldapadmin\config.php). Please
